Trending now — 3 topics with a genuine brand angle

1	Today, Oct 26, is National Pumpkin Day — a genuine, dated calendar hook distinct from the costume/spend/candy Halloween angles already used multiple times this month.	National Day Calendar — October 26	Instagram, light seasonal-merchandising post. “It’s National Pumpkin Day — a good nudge to check that pumpkin-flavored snacks, drinks, and seasonal items are actually stocked and visible on the shelf this week, not buried behind the Halloween candy display.” No age-restricted product mention, no pricing claim — a neutral seasonal-stocking reminder distinct from anything Halloween-costume-related.

2	The Federal Reserve's 2026 Small Business Credit Survey is open now and closes November 13, 2026 — a confidential, ~12-minute survey open to any for-profit business with fewer than 500 employees. Results shape how the Fed and policymakers understand small-business financing and lending gaps.	FedSmallBusiness.org — Important Dates; InsuranceNewsNet — Small businesses urged to complete Federal Reserve credit survey by Nov. 13	LinkedIn/Instagram, owner-to-owner civic-participation post. "The Fed's annual small business credit survey is open through Nov 13 — about 12 minutes, confidential, no personal info required. It's one of the few places small business owners' actual financing experience gets fed directly into how policymakers understand lending gaps. Worth the 12 minutes if you've got them." No product tie-in — a genuine, time-sensitive, owner-focused call to action.

3	KeyBank's 2026 Small Business Survey (released late September) found 54% of owners are now confident they could cover one month of operating expenses from cash reserves alone, up sharply from recent years — but inflation remains the top concern at 53%, up from 50% in 2025, and a third of owners say they've cut their own pay rather than pass costs to customers.	AccessNewswire / KeyBank — KeyBank Supports Community Small Businesses	LinkedIn, Patel Processing cash-advance tie-in. "New survey: more small business owners say they could cover a month of expenses from cash reserves than in past years — but it's still roughly half, and inflation is still the #1 worry. A thin cash cushion is normal, not a failure — it's exactly the gap a cash advance option exists to cover before it becomes a real problem." No specific rate/amount named — ties a real, recent data point to the existing cash advance program without overstating the offer. Survey was released Sept 30, flagged here as "recent" rather than "this week."

Skipped, no genuine angle today: World Series Game 3 (tonight, series shifts to Tampa, Brewers lead 2-0) — real and dated, but this would be the third World Series post in five days; held to avoid feeling padded. Pennsylvania/Iowa/South Carolina vape law recap — all already covered individually; North Carolina's additional Oct 1 provisions are the same underlying law already covered Oct 16, not a new story. TikTok trend search — no October-dated challenge or sound surfaced beyond stale or generic results. Fintech/payments news, loyalty-program news, CBD/hemp news, gas price data, Black Friday 2026 announcements — nothing reliably dated to this week turned up.

Compliance check: none of the three ideas imply pricing, encourage overconsumption, or use underage-adjacent framing — #1 is a neutral seasonal-stocking note with no age-restricted product; #2 is a civic-participation nudge with zero product tie-in; #3 references a real survey finding and frames a cash advance option generally, without naming a rate, fee, or specific dollar amount.
