Trending now — 3 topics with a genuine brand angle

1	The Milwaukee Brewers won a dramatic Game 1 of the 2026 World Series, 3-2 over the Tampa Bay Rays, on Friday Oct 23 — closing it out when a replay review overturned what looked like a game-ending double play before Trevor Megill struck out the potential tying run with runners on second and third. A real, specific, dated result with a genuinely notable moment — not a repeat of the "stock up for game night" traffic angle already used.	CBS Sports — Winners and losers from World Series Game 1; ESPN — Brewers 3-2 Rays box score	Instagram/TikTok, light social-engagement post (not operational advice). A quick "did you catch that ending?" story/poll referencing the overturned call and the 9th-inning strikeout — inviting customers to weigh in on whether they were watching, Game 2 predictions, etc. Pure relatability/ engagement content, no product tie-in, distinct from the earlier stocking-focused post.

2	Pennsylvania's new electronic nicotine product directory took effect Oct 19, 2026 — products not listed on the state's directory are now subject to seizure. The law is also being actively challenged in court, with the state asking the court to uphold it. Flavored products remain legal for adults — there's no statewide flavor ban, just a directory-listing requirement.	FOX29 — Nicotine vape laws across the Northeast	LinkedIn/Instagram, compliance post for PA vape/smoke retailers. "Pennsylvania's new vape product directory took effect Oct 19 — anything not on that state list is now subject to seizure, full stop. The law's still being challenged in court, but until that plays out, 'not listed = not sellable' is the operating reality. Worth checking your shelf against the state directory directly rather than waiting on the lawsuit." A directory-and-seizure mechanism distinct from NC's age-verification law, Virginia's permit/training law, Iowa's delayed directory, and South Carolina's excise tax — all already covered this month.

3	Today, Oct 24, is National Make a Difference Day — the fourth Saturday of October, a long-running (30+ year) national day encouraging volunteer action and community giving, alongside UN Day. A genuine, dated calendar hook distinct from anything Halloween/holiday-spend related.	National Day Calendar — October 24	Instagram/LinkedIn, community-goodwill post. “It’s National Make a Difference Day — a good nudge to ask what your store already does for the neighborhood around it, even something small: a register round-up for a local cause, pointing regulars toward a food drive, a couple hours of staff volunteering. Doesn’t have to be big to count.” No product plug — ties naturally into the community-involvement work already underway for RetailzPOS/Patel Processing, and gives independent store owners a low-effort, feel-good post of their own.

Skipped, no genuine angle today: More Halloween spend/stocking data (NRF’s $13.5B figure and GroundTruth’s discount-store visit stats) — retreads of ground already covered; a “cheapest shopping window” claim from a commercial blog was unverified and skipped. Loyalty-program news — nothing dated to this week. Diwali business news — 2026 figures are still pre-festival forecasts, nothing new dated this week. Payments/fintech SMB news — nothing dated to October found. Black Friday 2026 coverage — results were almost entirely Australia-specific. Retail theft/shrink data — most current figures trace back to 2022, stale.

Compliance check: none of the three ideas imply pricing, encourage overconsumption, or use underage-adjacent framing — #1 is a neutral sports-engagement post with no product mention; #2 is a factual compliance/seizure-risk prompt with no age-restricted product claim beyond the regulatory fact itself; #3 is a community-giving nudge with no product or discount mentioned.
