Trending now — 6 topics with a genuine brand angle

1	The NACS Show opens tomorrow (Oct 6-9, Las Vegas) — 24,000+ convenience-industry attendees, and NACS's own government-relations session is naming swipe fees, fuels, and age-restricted products as the top issues on the agenda this year.	NACS — Fighting for the Industry	LinkedIn, founder-voice, timed to the show. Not an exhibitor pitch — a short post riding the real conversation: "Swipe fees are back on the NACS Show agenda this week, and they should be — they're one of the few costs you can't negotiate your way out of as an independent. The one thing worth asking any POS vendor, whether you're in Vegas or not: can you actually show me where that fee hits, transaction by transaction, or is it buried in a monthly statement?" No pricing claims, just a sharper question to ask.

2	Insert-style card skimmers are beating chip readers, and stores that accept EBT are being targeted disproportionately — a single benefits card can carry thousands of taxpayer dollars, making EBT-accepting terminals a bigger payoff for skimmer crews; the Secret Service has an active crackdown underway.	CBS News — This card-skimming scam has stolen millions. Here's how the Secret Service is cracking down.	Instagram/Facebook, owner-safety post. Plain, factual: "Insert skimmers now beat chip cards — they read the data as the card goes in, no swipe needed. If you take EBT, you're a bigger target than you think." Follow with 2-3 physical checks any owner can do this week (wiggle-test the reader, check for a tamper-evident seal, compare it to the manufacturer photo). Security education, not a product pitch.
3	TikTok's "Some people call me..." trend — small business owners turn their own nicknames into a pitch setup, listing what people call them, landing on "but you can call me when [what they actually do]."	Startups.co.uk — Top 6 Social Media Trends For Businesses: October 2026	TikTok/Instagram template — for RetailzPOS customers, not RetailzPOS itself. Give store owners a ready-to-film script: "Some people call me the liquor store guy. Some people call me 'the one who always has my brand in stock.' You can call me open till 10 — walk-ins welcome." Package it as a swipeable caption template owners can drop their own details into; a genuinely useful customer-facing asset, not just a RetailzPOS post.

4	Amazon Prime Big Deal Days runs Oct 6-7 — 48 hours, deal drops three times a day, up to 55%+ off, Prime-exclusive.	About Amazon — Prime Big Deal Days 2026 is set for October 6-7	Instagram/Facebook counter-programming post. No discount claims of our own — just a contrast: “Amazon’s doing 48 hours of deals this week. You’ve been doing 365 days of knowing your regulars by name. That’s not something a blitz sale can buy.” Natural lead-in to a Moolah Points mention (loyalty as the independent retailer’s actual edge against a two-day sale), without stating any specific offer or price.
5	“That’s so you” identity carousels — visual carousels built from someone’s hyper-specific habits, preferences, and rituals, currently trending across TikTok and Instagram.	Startups.co.uk — Top 6 Social Media Trends For Businesses: October 2026	Instagram carousel for Moolah Points. Build a “that’s so you” carousel around a loyal (real, consenting, or clearly illustrative) regular: their usual order, their day/time, their go-to brand — ending on “Moolah Points remembers it too.” A warm, specific loyalty showcase in a format already proven to perform, not a generic “join our rewards program” post.

6	The “rock, paper, scissors” debate format — short videos/carousels pitting a familiar choice against a frustrating alternative, trending now as a quick-hit comparison style.	Startups.co.uk — Top 6 Social Media Trends For Businesses: October 2026	TikTok/Reels, liquor and smoke-shop angle. “Rock, paper, scissors: carding every regular by hand, every single time 🗿✂️📄 vs. one scan that checks ID, logs the sale, and moves the line 🗿✂️📄.” Quick, visual, compliance-education framed as a format-jack — not a feature-list ad, just the two experiences side by side.

Skipped, no genuine angle: the wedding-footage/“Patient Zero” and “Stop the Wedding” trends (no retail tie without forcing it), and C-StoreTEC (Oct 26–28) — holding that one for its own week closer to the date rather than covering two industry events in one brief.

Compliance check: none of the above imply pricing, encourage overconsumption, or use underage-adjacent framing — #1 and #2 are cost/security education, #4 and #5 are loyalty-forward without discount claims, #3 and #6 are light, non-promotional format content.
