Trending now — 3 topics with a genuine brand angle

1	North Carolina just added electronic age verification at the door as a requirement for vape shops — part of a new state budget provision that also includes a $1,000 annual licensing fee and tougher penalties for selling unauthorized products.	WSOC-TV — North Carolina Imposes New Vape Shop Rules, Annual Licensing Fee	Instagram/LinkedIn, compliance-tailwind post. “North Carolina just made electronic age verification a legal requirement for vape shops, not just a best practice. This is the direction the category is heading state by state — ‘we checked the ID’ is becoming ‘we have a system-level, logged check.’ Worth getting ahead of that shift rather than reacting to it once your state follows.” Direct validation of hard-block verification, framed as where regulation is heading.

2	Surcharging is legal in some states and banned outright in others — California, Connecticut, Maine, and Massachusetts prohibit credit-card surcharges entirely, while cash-discount programs are reported legal in all 50 states; “zero-fee” processing is mostly a marketing term, not a literal $0 cost.	Beancount — Credit Card Surcharge, Cash Discount & Dual Pricing: Passing Card Fees to Customers Legally (2026)	LinkedIn, Patel Processing payments-compliance post. “Surcharging isn’t legal everywhere — four states ban it outright, and ‘zero-fee’ processing almost never means an actual $0 cost. Cash discount programs are the one structure reported legal nationwide. If your processor hasn’t walked you through which model is actually compliant where you operate, that’s worth asking before you assume you’re covered.” No pricing claims — a sharper compliance question, same pattern as recent posts.

3	Hemp product stockpiling is picking up ahead of the (now-delayed) December 11 federal deadline — one Vermont retailer reported sales up roughly 40% as customers rush to buy before the new total-THC standard could make most current hemp-derived products federally unlawful.	Times Argus — Consumers Rush to Stock Up Before Hemp Products Become Illegal	Instagram/LinkedIn, real-time demand signal for CBD/hemp retailers. "Stores are already seeing hemp-product sales climb as the Dec 11 deadline gets closer — one retailer reported sales up around 40%. If that's not showing up in your own numbers yet, it's worth watching closely over the next few weeks rather than assuming the delay means the urgency went away too." Factual, no stockpiling encouragement toward end consumers — framed as inventory/demand awareness for the retailer.

Skipped, no genuine angle today: generic fall/seasonal merchandising advice (NRF's guidance was real but dated and generic — nothing new enough to post as "trending"), and another MLB angle (LCS results still unconfirmed in available sources; holding for the World Series itself, which starts Oct 23).

Compliance check: none of the above imply pricing, encourage overconsumption, or use underage-adjacent framing — #1 is regulatory-trend framing, #2 is a vendor-question prompt with no product claim, #3 is a factual retailer-facing demand signal, not a consumer-facing stockpiling push.
